The two cops who flouted work rules by using NYPD computers to make Wikipedia edits on the Eric Garner case need to be investigated, according to a new complaint filed by a Brooklyn attorney on Tuesday.

quite frank with you, other than the admonishment advising them on department policy,” Bratton said.

But the complaint charges that Bratton “stood up for the notion that police officers are above the law.”

The NYPD declined to comment and has not named the officers.

Interest Board, demanding the agency and the Department of Investigation probe the “seeming violation of the New York City Charter.”

Glickman, who filed the complaint as an individual and not on behalf of his firm, said Police Commissioner Bill Bratton’s “dismissive attitude” about the controversy prompted him to make the complaint.

“I know how seriously agency heads take this,” Glickman said. “I was surprised to hear the commissioner at least not make some public statement about the seriousness of violating the city’s ethics laws.”

Bratton on Monday said the cops had been identified but likely will not be disciplined for the unsanctioned changes. “I don’t anticipate any punishment, being

Re: Complaint Against Police Officers' Misuse of Public Computers

Dear Mr. Davies –

Pursuant to § 2603(e) of the Charter of the City of New York, the undersigned makes this official complaint to the Conflicts of Interest Board in reference to the apparent personal use (misuse) of City computers by unnamed but apparently identified police officers. I make this complaint as a civil rights attorney and concerned citizen of the City of New York.

On March 13, 2015, Capital New York reported that alterations made to Wikipedia entries about the police caused deaths of Eric Garner, Sean Bell and Amadou Diallo that shift blame away from police officers were made from IP addresses located at 1 Police Plaza. On March 16, 2015, Commissioner Bratton announced that the police officers who used department computers to alter the Wikipedia entries had been identified and that he "did not expect they would be punished." He also did not name the officers.

As you are well aware, the misuse of public taxpayer resources for non-city business is a violation of § 2604(b)(3) of the Charter of the City of New York, and punishable by a fine of up to $25,000 per incident and the person "shall be guilty of a misdemeanor", and if convicted, forfeit his or her public employment. The conduct that has been widely reported and confirmed by the Commissioner clearly constitutes a violation of the law. Indeed, Mayor Bill de Blasio made clear that the officers' use of City computers for this purpose was not authorized.

We are deeply concerned not only about the reported flagrant violation of our City's strong Conflicts of Interest Law, but the Commissioner's dismissive attitude about it. By stating that he did not expect the police officers to be punished, he stood up for the notion that police officers are above the law. Whereas the hard working teachers, clerks and custodians who work for our City have to abide by the Conflicts of Interest Law, his police officers do not.

STOLL, GLICKMAN & BELLINA

Glickman said he was "was surprised to hear the commissioner at least not make some public statement about the seriousness of violating the city's ethics laws."

In a bombshell first reported by Capital New York, computers within the NYPD network were used to make changes — corrections and clarification as well as additions and subtractions — on a number of high-profile cases dating back to Police Commissioner Ray Kelly's previous administration. The NYPD's computer server is only able to track activity for the previous year.

In December, shortly after a Staten Island grand jury voted for no indictment in the Garner chokehold death, the officers in question made several Wikipedia changes, including edits on details about the case.

City employees who use office resources for outside business can be fined up to $25,000, according to the City Charter — and the Conflicts of Interest Board has cited dozens of municipal workers for similar infractions since 1990.

Glickman’s complaint called that “an eye-opening disparity that ought to give rise to serious investigation.”

DOI said it doesn’t discuss investigations until they are done.

These bohunks should have just left it up to the pros at the NYPD Office of Misinformation. They are expert spin doctors who are trained to manage and mold public opinion, and THEY are smart enough to use a proxy, so the footprints can't be followed home. Sheez... now these amateurs come along and open up this whole can of worms... for nothing.

Good work, Lawyer Glickman. I hope you get a successful resolution. The infringement by the NYPD on Wikipedia, is egregious. I hope you actions set a precedent.

I'm afraid the whole issue escapes me. Isn't Wikipedia open to being edited by ANYONE, at ANYTIME? Hasn't this source been condemned on numerous occasions for the inaccuracy of the information and the ease of any moron to replace information originally provided by the knowledgeable? If this is the case, let someone re-edit the offending work.

The NYPD criminals were doing what they've been caught doing hundreds of thousands of times: cheating, lying, and breaking the law.

And it violated WIKIPEDIA's own rules. Nice try, COP TROLL. You guys never learn, do you?

No, I'm not a "cop troll," simply someone unfamiliar with Wikipedia who refuses to use it precisely because anyone can alter it at any time. I genuinely am confused to know how cops are different from any other person with an ax to grind or uneducated yahoo.
